

There's a lot of activity on the Barry Camera Club Facebook with more members starting to share and discuss their images. It would be great if more members joined in. You can choose to become involved in Facebook as much or as little as you want to. Some members have joined to just be involved with the Barry Camera Club Facebook Group. You set your own privacy settings and you can 'friend' as many people as you wish, it's up to you, plus you can ignore any friend requests that you may get from others. It's a great forum for seeing members' work and for keeping up-to-date with other things. There is a step-by-step guide here: <https://www.digitalunite.com/guides/social-networking-blogs/facebook/how-join-facebook>

Once you have a Facebook account, to join the club Facebook group, go to this link: <https://www.facebook.com/groups/113445182617/> Then click 'Join group' as shown below. One of the page administrators will then add you to the group when they are logged in. You will know when you have been added because you will then be able to add comments, photos etc and reply to other people's posts on the group page.

Have fun and join in with the camera club's online presence. It's another way of showing people what you are up with your photography, especially if you don't join in with the club's monthly competitions. How else will other members get to see your work?
